Part 3. Membership and the Data Protection Act

The Guild keeps membership information in a computer database, including details such as names, addresses, telephone numbers, type of membership and subscription information. This information is used only for the proper running of the Guild. Disclosure of the above information is restricted to:

1. officers of the Guild on request.
2. committee members to enable them to undertake specific tasks on behalf of the Guild.
3. others to enable the newsletter, or other pertinent information, to be mailed direct to the members.

To meet with the requirements of the Data Protection Act, we must have your permission to keep your personal details in a computer database and for using that information as indicated. When you sign this form you will be giving the Guild the necessary permission. The computer database is the Guild's sole arrangement for registering your personal details.

Important Note: The foregoing arrangements will provide you with legal protection which otherwise you would not have. With your details in the computer database, the Data Protection Act prohibits the guild from disclosing your personal information to third parties unless you give specific permission.
